Are the costs and charges of the product compatible with the needs, objectives and characteristics of the target market ?

The cost of the product is relatively low when compared to the cost of the core product to which it attaches to. This is reflective of the typical low frequency but relative (to premium) high severity of claims. A typical customer with a turnover of less than £500k is prepared to pay an affordable additional premium of between £75 and £150 to cater for the possibility of a legal dispute with the product offering a typical per claim limit of £100,000.

Is the charging structure of the product appropriately transparent for the target market, such as that it does not disguise charges or is too complex to understand ?

The product is included as an optional add-on to a core product where the premium will be clearly identifiable as an optional extension in a customer's quotation or renewal invitation.

Do the charges undermine the return expectations of the insurance product?

A customer will typically be charged between £75 and £150 for the product. With an average cost of per claim of £5,000 and a typical per claim limit of £100,000. the premium charged is easily justifiable and proportionate.

5. Distribution

Distribution Chain

Short / simple - {Coverholder / Broker > Customer}

Distribution Method

Website - Broker / Retail Broker

What are the distribution channels for this product and how does Arc ensure that they are appropriate for the target market?

We have selected the following distribution channels based on their closeness to the target market and as a result their understanding of the customer;

- Insurance Intermediaries
- Managing General Agents
- Insurance Companies

Does the intended distribution strategy remain appropriate and consistent with the target market ?

Our products are intended to be distributed alongside a core commercial policy. In this scenario, a customer is assessing the risks associated with being a business including the potential of legal disputes and considering whether to transfer that risk by purchasing Commercial Legal Expenses Insurance.

Our distribution channels remain the most appropriate strategy in terms of reaching the target market and being of adequate standards to identify the customers who are compatible with the target market's needs, characteristics and objectives.

What reasonable steps will Arc take to ensure the product is distributed to the target market ?

We carry out analysis of internal complaints and cancellation data supplied by our distributors to identify trends which may imply that the product is not being distributed to the target market. Where trends are identified, corrective actions are provided to the distributor to rectify the situation. If necessary we will impose sanctions including cancellation of agencies.

We encourage distributors to partake in product training to assist them in identifying customers in the target market.
